Everyone has the right to know whether or not their personal data is stored in a filing system. However, there are a number of exceptions to this principle. The right to access and inspect data does not apply if this would impede the prevention or investigation of a crime or pose a serious risk to the health or treatment of the data subject or the rights of another person, for example. For more about the rights of data subjects, see the Data Protection Ombudsman website.

The National Police Board is the controller of data stored the ERC information system that fall under the jurisdiction of the police.

Everyone has the right to request access to their personal data. The request must include all necessary identifying information about the person in order for the information to be retrieved from the filing system. If the data subject has exercised the right inspect data in the past year, the controller may charge a reasonable fee to cover the direct costs of fulfilling the request.

The correct recipient of the data is always verified. The response to the request to inspect data is mailed by recorded delivery. For this reason, the request must include a postal address to which the data subject wants the response delivered.

In the case of data in the ERC information system not under the jurisdiction of the police, requests to inspect data are fulfilled by the Emergency Response Centre Administration as the principal controller.

Requests to inspect personal data are processed within two weeks. If the request concerns a longer period of time or is otherwise unusually extensive, the processing time is one month.
